Baker's utilities, gardener paid by Poly

President receives $153,660 a year, a car and lives on campus for his job position

By Travis Mooney
Daily Staff Writer

In a year filled with outcries against pay raises in an ever-shrinking California State University budget, Cal Poly students may be relieved to learn that President Warren Baker may not make as much as they think.

With a salary dwarfed by the University of California chancellors, the UC equivalent to a CSU president, Baker's compensation package isn't extravagant, according to Dan Howard-Greene, Baker's executive assistant.

Baker's current compensation package includes: his salary of $153,660 per year — the highest for any CSU president; a standard fringe benefits package, including health insurance and a retirement package; the president's home on campus; a state car and an annual physical.

"Official functions at the (president's) residence are catered by the Foundation," Howard-Greene said.

In addition to the president's residence, which Baker is required to live in by contract, the university pays for the upkeep of the house and its grounds — including housekeeping and gardening — as well as utility bills generated by Cal Poly's first family.

Instead of having a paid residence on campus, most CSU presidents and UC chancellors are given a housing allowance, Howard-Greene said.

"It's important to note that many receptions and other official functions happen at the president's residence," he added.

According to Debbie Brothwell, an associate director for the Budget Planning and Administration office, "There is a department account for state business, things like paper for the office and pens."

Baker receives no compensation from the Cal Poly Foundation, Howard-Greene added.

Reactions from students are mixed.

"I've always thought of Cal Poly as comparable to the UCs," said Jeff Haukaas, an agribusiness senior. "I'd find that his responsibility is comparable (to the UC chancellors). Maybe their salary is too high."

Another student said Baker's salary might be reasonable.

"His salary seems extravagant in relation to a professor's," said Jesse Thomas, a mechanical engineering sophomore. "However, when you look in comparison, it seems fair. We have to pay a decent amount for someone that can do the job."

However, both Haukaas and Thomas were unsure if they could accurately judge the amount of compensation that Baker receives.

"I don't know," Haukaas said. "It's hard for a student to see what he does."

Thomas agreed that most students don't have the chance to interact with Baker.

"He doesn't have much contact with the students," Thomas said. "It's hard to say if that's his job or not."

Recruiting style attracts more students

By Peggy Curtin
Daily Staff Writer

Since 1993, Cal Poly has more aggressively recruited prospective applicants — and it seems to be paying off.

A dramatic jump in applications, especially those from prospective freshmen, is expected this year due mainly to a system that is "linking" the campus directly to prospects.

"Initially it was set up to help regain the applicant pool," said Director of Admissions and Recruitment James Maraviglia.

During the late 1980s, undergraduate applications rose steadily, reaching 15,600 in 1990. In 1991, though, the number dropped to 13,980 and decreased every year concluding with 12,211 in 1993.

This year the Office of Admissions expects to process about 16,000 undergraduate applications for both freshmen and transfer students to attend Cal Poly, up almost 4,000 from 1993.

The university merged the Office of Admissions and University Outreach Services in 1993 to help combat the decrease and established a new plan and new objectives for recruiting, including: developing prospective applicant pools, communicating to each applicant that Cal Poly was a good choice, convincing admitted students to enroll, and advising, orientation and registration for new students.

In addition, one of the main objectives of the more aggressive plan is to involve the entire campus. President Warren Baker, college deans, department chairs, student clubs and the Alumni Association would all help communicate with prospective students.

Admissions staff members hope to execute these goals using new technology like electronic viewbooks, electronic applications, the World Wide Web (WWW) and CD-ROM recruiters.

UC Regents review decision to rescind Affirmative Action

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Affirmative action — the controversial issue that thrust University of California officials into the unwanted glare of national publicity last summer — is back on the agenda.

Two proposals are up for consideration today.

One, from student Regent Ed Gomez, would rescind the UC Board of Regents' July vote dropping race and gender preferences from hiring, contracting and admissions.

The other, put forward by Regent Judith Levin, would essentially impose a one-year moratorium on the new policies.

The proposals are scheduled for consideration by committee. They could be voted down, referred to the full board for consideration or simply tabled.

Committee members include Ward Connerly, who sponsored the original measures eliminating preferences, and Republican Gov. Pete Wilson, who made repealing affirmative action a cornerstone of his since-canceled presidential campaign.

Wilson, a regent by virtue of his office, will be at today's meeting.

"Last July, the Regents took an important and courageous step toward ensuring fairness for all. That decision will not be undermined or deterred by those who merely want to retain the status quo," he said in a statement.

Democratic Lt. Gov. Gray Davis, also a regent by virtue of his office but a more frequent attendee than Wilson, said he will be "delighted to see the governor again."

But Davis, who voted in favor of keeping race and gender

Students block UCSC entrances to protest affirmative action ban

Associated Press

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — Students protesting the University of California's ban on affirmative action shut the entrances to the UC Santa Cruz campus on Wednesday, leading to 14 arrests.

The protest came the day before UC regents reconsider their July decision, which has led to a series of demonstrations throughout the nine-campus UC system.

About 150 students gathered at each of two entrances to the campus. Some promised that they and students from other campuses would demonstrate at the regents' meeting, which continues Thursday in San Francisco.

University spokeswoman Liz Irwin said the protesters were ordered to disperse. When they didn't, campus police and other law enforcement officials moved

Train derailment causes delays for its passengers

By Stephen Enders
Daily Staff Writer

Although there were no injuries to weekend travelers, a partially-derailed Amtrak train left passengers on the San Diego line with more than rattled nerves Monday evening.

The derailment occurred just outside of the San Luis Obispo station, near Tank Farm Road.

Amtrak ticket agent Bob Levin said Tuesday that the one-car derailment occurred not because of a technical malfunction, but vandalism.

"Someone probably threw the switch," Levin said. "It was so minor. The train was only going about three miles per hour."

Amtrak public relations spokesman Dan Whitaker, however, would not acknowledge vandalism as the cause.

"The switch is operator-controlled. The conductor has to get out and change the switch to set the tracks," Whitaker said. "We're not sure if there was vandalism involved."

Amtrak is taking all precautions, and an investigation is underway to determine what caused the derailment.

Whitaker said this type of accident does not happen often. If vandalism is suspected, however, the investigation will be turned over to the National Transportation and Safety Board.

Besides the minor accident, some Amtrak customers were upset over the major delay the derailment caused in their travel plans.

The train was originally set to arrive about 10-20 minutes later than the scheduled 8:33 p.m. arrival time, said English senior Karen Spaeder. Once the train partially derailed, she said, the delay was only supposed to be an additional half hour.

Apple goes sour, cleans house

By Catalina Ortiz
Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Losing money and market share, Apple Computer Inc. moved Wednesday toward becoming a different company, eliminating 1,300 jobs and abandoning some sales opportunities to other firms.

Apple said it will concentrate on "best-of-class" computers in its key markets, including desktop publishing, education and the home. Such machines are more profitable than those in the entry-level consumer market, which Apple apparently now plans to leave to companies that clone its Macintosh computer.

The changes are an "initial phase" of a reorganization Apple announced with its financial results for the last three months of 1995.

The company, as it previously warned, lost $69 million, or 56 cents a share, in the period, its first fiscal quarter. Apple earned $188 million, or $1.55 a share, in the same period in 1994.

Apple also forecast a loss for the second fiscal quarter and said that loss would be worsened by a $125 million charge to pay for the restructuring.

Sales in the latest quarter rose 11 percent, to $3.1 billion from $2.8 billion. And unit shipments grew 12 percent to 1.3 million.

Such volume is the highest ever for Cupertino, Calif.-based Apple. But it was below internal targets and sharply behind the overall industry's growth, which means the company lost market share.

The company's gross profit margins fell to 15.1 percent of sales during the quarter, down from 20.7 in the previous quarter and 28.7 a year ago.

"The task in which Apple management and its board of directors is currently engaged is to utilize Apple's strengths in order to position the company for long-term strength and success," Michael Spindler, Apple's president and chief executive officer,

ADMISSIONS: New 'RESPONSE' system funnels information more quickly

The university has already processed more than 10,000 electronic applications in the past two years. Cal Poly also has a WWW page that anyone can access from all over the world via the Internet.

To communicate with applicants, the Office of Admissions adopted a system in September 1993 called "RESPONSE." RESPONSE is a computerized system that funnels information about such things as testing requirements, advising and registration dates directly to each prospect in a personalized, timely manner with minimal staff support.

The music department began their own method of contacting students several years ago — the department currently sends a music interest card to admitted students.

"Obviously, (the card) helps the department, but often-times students don't know that they can continue (their music) when they go to college," said Greg Barata, associate professor of music.

Through the RESPONSE system, items such as the music interest card can be typed up once, then sent out to any prospective student who expressed an interest in the subject.

The more aggressive recruiting plan has not cost the university any more money than is usually spent on admissions and recruitment. The additional money needed for the new system will come as a result of a grant called the Productivity Improvement Proposal from the CSU chancellor's office.

So far, the benefits of the plan can be seen in the rise in number of applications. And since September of 1993, the admissions team has developed 211 different sources with more than 120,000 qualified prospective applicants.

These sources are developed from a variety of places, ranging from people who have written letters to the university, to those who have visited the Cal Poly store downtown and filled out prospect cards.

"Intrusive interaction is necessary, not only to recruit, but to enroll," Maraviglia said.

Although most students don't feel that mail sent to them was the reason they decided to go to Cal Poly, they said it could help others become more aware of what the university has to offer.

AMTRAK: Buses transport passengers to station

Buses were sent to transport passengers to the station around 9:30 p.m., but there was not enough room for all the passengers. For Spaeder and a car of passengers who had to wait for the buses to unload and return to the train, the delay was longer; the passengers finally returned to the station around 10:30 p.m.

"I would have liked to have been compensated," Spaeder said.

According to Levin, no refunds or other compensation were given to passengers because of the accidents' proximity to the station. Levin said that Amtrak would refund customers had the accident occurred on a longer trip or farther away from a particular destination.

Spaeder said she thinks that Amtrak should have provided better customer service, especially in the event of a derailment or delay.

As bus and train lines compete for business, and as air travel becomes cheaper, Spaeder said that Amtrak should "bend over backwards" to keep customers.

Julie Blow, Greyhound Bus Line manager in San Luis Obispo, said that Greyhound has tried to change its customer service to be more responsive to the customer's needs.

In the event of a delay, "Greyhound would give a portion of the fare as a refund, or offer a travel coupon for future travel," Blow said.

"If I'd known it was going to take so long, I just would have gotten out and walked to a phone," Spaeder said.

APPLE: Company to lay off 8 percent of workforce

said in a statement.

"The most immediate and obvious work we must undertake is to quickly streamline operations. The workforce reduction is a necessary first step."

Apple's troubles have sparked speculation about whether Spindler would keep his job. But the company's announcement did not mention any change in his status.

The 1,300 layoffs, about 8 percent of Apple's workforce, will take place over the next year. Most will be in sales, marketing and administration, Spindler said.

Industry analysts had speculated that Apple could lay off up to 3,500 of its 14,000 employees. It was not immediately known if further reorganization would mean more job cuts.

"(Apple) can no longer be all things to all people. And it must emerge as a company that focuses on products that they do well," Tim Bajarin, president of Creative Strategies Research International, said of Apple's more restricted focus.

One Apple observer wasn't impressed with Apple's announcement.

"I see no new strategy. I see sort of a Band-Aid to stop the hemorrhaging, and not a very affected Band-Aid at that," said Pieter Hartsook, publisher of the Hartsook Letter in Alameda, Calif.

Apart from the announced layoffs, Apple didn't say anything it hasn't already said about focusing on key markets and getting more companies to clone the Macintosh, he said.

Terror plot yields stiff sentences

By Larry Neumeister
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Professing their innocence, Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman and nine followers were handed long prison sentences Wednesday for plotting to blow up the United Nations, FBI offices, highway tunnels and other New York-area landmarks in a single day of terror.

Abdel-Rahman, a militant Muslim cleric and the spiritual leader of the conspiracy, delivered a long, impassioned speech in Arabic before he was sentenced to a mandatory term of life without parole.

"This case is nothing but an extension of the American war against Islam," he told U.S. District Judge Michael Mukasey through an interpreter.

Of the cleric's followers, the judge came down hardest on El Sayyid Nosair, sentencing him to life in prison for his role in the bomb plot and for killing militant anti-Arab Rabbi Meir Kahane in a New York hotel in 1990.

"Because of the bombing of the World Trade Center, the government made up this case," complained Nosair, who had been acquitted of the murder in state court before being charged with the assassination as part of the conspiracy.

Eight other defendants received prison terms of up to 57 years for planning what prosecutors called a "war of urban terrorism" aimed at altering U.S. policy in the Middle East.

Nosair's cousin Ibrahim A. El-Gabrowni, 45, received 57 years for the conspiracy and other charges, including possession of bogus passports and visas intended to get Nosair out of the country following a jailbreak.

Seven other defendants received prison terms of 25 to 35 years for planning what prosecutors called a "war of urban terrorism" aimed at altering U.S. policy in the Middle East.

"Because of the bombing of the World Trade Center, the government made up this case."

"I'm not a terrorist," pleaded Mohammed Saleh, 39, who said he came to the United States to finish college and earn money to raise five children. The government "squeezed a few words" from a conversation he had with an informant to convict him, he argued.

Mukasey sentenced him to the maximum 35 years for his "monstrous crime."

The sentencing came nearly two years after the convictions of four men in the World Trade Center bombing, which killed six people and injured more than 1,000. The conspirators in the terror plot were not directly charged in that bombing but were accused of being part of the organization that carried it out.

The men planned to bomb the United Nations, FBI headquarters in Manhattan, the Lincoln and Holland tunnels and the George Washington Bridge.

The defendants were convicted Oct. 1 of seditious conspiracy and other charges. Abdel-Rahman, 57, also was convicted of plotting to assassinate Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, which carries a mandatory life term.

Outside the federal courthouse, a small army of police officers wore bulletproof vests and carried semiautomatic weapons. Two bomb-sniffing dogs patrolled the courthouse with federal agents. Concrete barriers prevented vehicles from approaching.

Along with Saleh, two other defendants received maximum sentences of 35 years: Tarig Elhassan, 40, and Clement Hampton-El, 57.

Fadil Abdelgani, 33, got 25 years; Fares Khallafalla, 33, received 30 years; Amir Abdelgani, 35, got 30 years; and Victor Alvarez, 29, was sentenced to 35 years.

Mukasey said defendants who were more involved or lied on the witness stand received harsher sentences.

Alvarez, whom defense lawyers characterized as borderline retarded, denied any knowledge of the plot.

"Forgive me if it sounds coldhearted," Mukasey responded, "but people who are killed by people with limited capacity are just as dead as people killed by geniuses."

During the nine-month trial, defense attorney Lynne Stewart argued that the sheik was a spiritual leader being prosecuted for his speech.

Mohammad T. Mehdi, president of the American-Arab Relations Committee in New York, called the case "a sort of witch hunt against Muslims in America."

"It seems America has a need for foreign villains," he said. "With the demise of communism, Islam is the candidate. So the trial was really a show to intimidate the American Muslims, suppress our freedom to the detriment of the Constitution."

Thro' the door

On to Mondragon

by Randy Davis

Given the recent focus on our country's budget, it seems that the time has arrived for us to look closely at the conventional model of economics. Many economists suggest this form of economics is in a state of crisis similar to that of physics at the beginning of the 1900s. For this reason I began to ask friends of mine what they thought about the future of economics. My Triple-A (atheist/anarchist/architect) friend gave me some literature on Mondragon, Spain, a region whose economic system might be described as Sustainable Economics.

I want to briefly mention Mondragon's economy. This group of 160 co-ops, owned by its 23,000 workers, is the world's largest democratically-run employee business. Since its inception in 1956, this group, which boasts well over $3 billion in sales in the early '90s, has consistently been faster-growing and more profitable (with scarcely any layoffs) than the surrounding areas. In Mondragon, more than 95 percent of new businesses survive and flourish.

But what exactly is Sustainable Economics? Well, I hope we had a dialogue like last quarter when capitalism and socialism were handled so capably by Kurt Horner and Matt Monpas. I will, however, attempt to set the stage for those more learned in this area than I.

A broader perspective of the effects of human industry upon the earth is behind Mondragon and is central to Sustainable Economics. No longer is the key question one of a simple cost vs. benefit orientation. Sustainable Economics realizes that "every human activity has impacts on our life, on how we allocate our time..." In essence, sustainable Economics asks that we leave behind the destructive idea that humanity has dominion over the earth and recognize the responsibilities of stewardship.

I ask: Can we apply these ideas here in SLO? In California (remember Callenbach's "Ectopia"?). Or better yet, can they be applied in the U.S.A., and across the world?

Well, we have some of these components here in our area; damn near every one of us has gone to Farmer's Market. Simply a chance to turn the wheels of our economy? No! The Farmer's Market provides a venue in which many of us interact, or become informed, politically, socially and otherwise. You can sign a Rain-forest Action petition to call attention to that corporate Jeffrey Dahmer, Mitsubishi. You can find tables for Christians, chiropractors and animal rights activists. Craftspeople, various foods and sundries abound. Nothing like socializing and building community while you grab some fresh flowers and basil.

We also have various co-housing arrangements in this area. Here people share financial arrangements, cooking, child-care and any number of other facets from their enriched lives. The idea of cooperation has replaced competition in this model of economics.

I hope some interested parties will add to our picture of Mondragon and to our idea of Sustainable Economics, because when I look across this continent, and to others, I see great problems that require more than a band-aid to make better. Because money is now so central to our existence, maybe we should find a new way to go about economics. The evidence suggests this system is not working as well as we all need it to.

"I know of no country, indeed, where the love of money has taken stronger hold on the affections of men and where a profounder contempt is expressed for the theory of the permanent equality of property."

-de Tocqueville

COMMENTARY

Off with the rat's head!

by Dawn E. Pillsbury

It never ceases to amaze me how we get kicked around by our servants. Never has it been more true that you just can't find decent help these days.

I can hear you chortle, you underfinanced Poly student you. "I certainly can't afford servants," you mutter. "If I could I wouldn't have a 5-foot pile of laundry in the middle of my floor waiting to trip and maul me when I venture home."

It is true that you probably can't afford personal servants, unless you or your parents are so wealthy that you don't really need to be here and can fool around wasting time taking classes like Horror Fiction or Advanced Basketweaving. But you, nevertheless, are employing many, many servants.

Tax collectors, road maintenance workers, garbage men, welfare workers, social workers, administration bureaucrats of all varieties, police officers, school teachers, DMV drones and thousands of others. You, with your hard-earned tax dollars still stained with the grease of Burger King or AppleBees, pay their salaries.

They give us blank looks when we ask them simple questions and order us to other lines when we finally get to the front of the one we are dearly supposed to be in. And remember, you're paying them by the hour.

This goes even more so for the employees of fair Cal Poly.

When you're waiting in line for one of the numerous "services" this campus offers, remember that whoever is wasting your precious minutes by making the person at the end of the line show every form of identification they possess, including grammar school ID cards and fishing licenses, you're paying them by the hour.

And yet they intimidate us. They give us blank looks when we ask them simple questions and order us to other lines when we finally get to the front of the line we are clearly supposed to be in, "Please fill out this form in triplicate and it has to be typed despite the fact I just spent an hour watching you fill it out by hand." And we put up with it. Doesn't that infuriate you?

The bureaucrats we never see are the worst of all. Take President Baker. Please. The few moments he's on campus a year, he devotes to convincing us that his bastard administration needs more money to continue giving us lousy service. Most of the unknown bureaucrats spend their student-subsidized time campaigning for the Poly Plan. Like vampires heading a blood drive. It reminds me of the English kings during the Crusades.

They considered the English people ill-educated, stinking oafs, hardly spoke English, thinking it a barbaric language and preferring French. The only time they came to Britain was to raise money to continue their stupid Crusades. And we who took history of the middle ages or watched "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves" know how successful that particular venture was. Actually, not to slander Sean Connery, but the legend about King Richard was that he hardly spent any time in England, spoke with a French accent, and was lovers with the king of France. So much for the Disney version of Robin Hood.

Well, even though the French gave refuge and coddled the English kings, they knew what to do with their own. Monsieur Guillotine, where are you now?

Olive Ruskettle, the great bard of "Azure Bonds," once said, "You can't take kings too seriously or they'll start taking themselves seriously." This definitely goes for our servants, the administration. Remember that people are generally only in government service if they're not fit for anything else.

Robert Anson Heinlein, the author of "Stranger in a Strange Land" and "Time Enough for Love" and many other science fiction classics, said government employees who think they're not getting paid enough can go out and get real jobs.

This, of course, does not go for teachers. The administration rats are making their jobs just as hard as they're making it for us to be students. Cheap power trips are the best thrills bureaucrats can hope for in their measly and sordid lives.

So what do we do about it? I think we need to teach the rats that we know their true worth, which is less than agricultural by-products. Bartenders should make them pay for a round for the house when they go into bars. People should feel free to pelt them with trash when they recognize them in public. If they're caught embezzling they ought to be exposed in stocks then ridden out of town on rails. Tar and feathers optional.

We must consider it our sacred duty to keep these people from taking themselves and their jobs too seriously. Maybe then they'll stop trying to make us pay them more for work that, frankly, any rat could do.

3 lb. thrill

He didn't mind being

interrupted.

He was sitting in his manager's office looking at photos of his band performing live. "They turned out pretty good," he said on the other end of the telephone line, "since most of the time we just come out looking sweaty."

Sweaty?

For lead vocalist Matt Brown and his new band,

3 lb.

Thrill, sweaty leads to heavily soiled laundry.

But that's OK

. Maybe some day soon, 3 lb. Thrill will be paying someone else to do their wash.

The band has recently released its debut album, "Vulture," on the Sony Music label Sony 550. The band's first single, "Diana," hit the Los Angeles airwaves Jan. 9 after it completed a tour with Matthew Sweet, which included a stop at the SLO Veterans Memorial Building this last November.

Book Review: The Secrets of Dating

He Said

Mark Armstrong
Daily Staff Writer

It sounded like a brilliant idea.

Three men with more than 45-combined years of dating experience wanted to present a candid book about dating in the 90s.

"Dating with Success" is the brainchild of Jon Riggle, Joe Preller and Mike Breschi, three friends who believed that modern dating required "a refreshing, new perspective."

What they ended up presenting is more reminiscent of a pseudo-sensitive, 12-step program than a book of useful dating tips. I felt like hugging myself and climbing a mountain instead of going on a date.

They were, however, on the right track with their idea. The authors felt too many dating books on the market treat the dating scene as a hunting ground.

Riggle, Preller and Breschi aimed for a kinder, gentler dating book, with no maps and strategies.

"Strategies imply suspicion, defense, attack and conquest," they write in their first chapter titled: "A Healthy Dating Mentality."

They devoted this section to preparing the mind for the dark, looming first date. The three men end up taking up one-third of the book discussing this "preparation."

The authors present "positive affirmations" as a way to build self-esteem and stop blaming the other person for bad dating experiences.

Confidence boosting quotes such as "instead of trying to find the right person, BECOME the right person!" or "It is not magic that makes dating successful, it is YOU!" fill the margins of the pages to warm the reader's heart. Ooh, I'm tingling!

After this pre-date mind conditioning, the authors (not licensed therapists) concede that if you are extremely troubled with dating, maybe you should just put down this book seek some real professional help.

Then comes the juicy stuff — sex.

"It is our experience that the longer you wait to have sex, the better the chances are for having a healthy and rewarding dating experiences," they write, yet go on to provide an actual suggested time to start having sex. "As a rule of thumb, we suggest waiting a minimum of three months, or twelve dates."

The book also includes many commonly asked questions about dating, which could be very useful to the socially-challenged, but plain common-sense to others.

The authors generate a bit of controversy with the question, "how many people should I date at one time?"

Riggle, Preller and Breschi suggest three at the most. "More than three tends to be confusing and consumes too much time and energy."

Those of us in college have probably acquired the same knowledge this book gives by simply interacting with the opposite sex.

As for the first-time daters, such as 15-year-olds who might be bored with all of the mind-work involved, they should instead turn on a daytime talk show for some juicy dating advice.

She Said

By Remi Sklar
Daily Staff Writer

Looking for the big clue to solve the mystery behind dating? Well keep searching, because I don't think it can be found in a book.

After reading "Dating With Success," which entails strategy to cure dating problems, I realized that most people really don't need books to go out on great dates.

It is impossible to have set rules for dating, because people are unique individuals with different concerns.

However, this book offered some interesting ways to improve your dating mentality. It said to focus on you, instead of the person you want to date.

"Instead of trying to find the right person, become the right person!"

There are some good points made, but like the book said, only you can make your date a good one. One key can't be found to unlock successful dating for everybody.

The authors of the book thought they found the secret to a positive dating attitude, but their advice sounded like it came straight from Saturday Night Live's Daily Affirmations with Stuart Smalley.

"I'm good enough, I'm smart enough, and gosh darn it, people like me!"

Yes, they suggested self-affirmation before going out on dates. It's a nice idea, but their examples were not realistic. Their affirmations include: "dating is fun and enjoyable; I'm a lovable person; I enjoy my life."

I agree that having self-respect is extremely important. You will feel more relaxed with others if you are comfortable with yourself. If you are comfortable, then you will be less anxious.

"Anxiety over expected danger" is how the book defined fear. They gave beneficial accounts of the different kinds of fears and nervous tension involved with dating.

For instance, they explained the fear of rejection, the fear of intimacy, and the fear of commitment.

In addition, the authors presented guidelines for alleviating fear on first dates. The following suggestion came from the top of their list:

"Have a game plan or specific agenda," the book said.

Whatever happened to spontaneity? They said to have fun while dating, which is excellent. But sometimes you have to just go with the flow of a date to have fun. The two people on the date should let their personalities guide them on a natural course.

The book is written by three men with "45-years-combined dating experience" and they advise you to wait three months or 12 dates before having a sexual relationship.

I found fault with this section because they never mentioned love, except to say that you shouldn't lie and tell someone you love them just to have sex. That's true, but they excluded how love allows you to feel more comfortable in those situations.

A key point made in the book is "don't say you will call if you won't." Dating is hard enough without having to wait by a phone that never rings.

If you try to find people who are compatible with your feelings in an everyday environment, then dating won't be frightening. These people can't be found on the pages of a book.

'Heat's' intrigue, acting talent keeps audience in 3-hour trance

Susannah Linwood
Daily Staff Writer

Even though it was a three-hour movie, Heat kept me on the edge of my seat anticipating the next moves of Al Pacino and Robert De Niro in this cops-and-robbers film.

The movie began with a love-making scene between homicide cop Al Pacino and his wife, prompting comments and reactions from the student-dominated audience at the Fremont Theatre on discount evening.

Al Pacino grabs his loaded gun, kisses his wife goodbye and is off for duty as usual. This dedicated cop puts his work before everything in his endless mission of solving crimes.

He is quick, intelligent and intense. Pacino means business and is faced with his match when trying to terminate the well-crafted robberies of a hardened criminal played by De Niro.

Ready to face anything, De Niro is devoted to his missions and won't let anything hold him back. He follows his philosophy of not anchoring himself to anything, or anyone, he can't leave within 30 seconds.

De Niro conspires these well-planned robberies with the help of three accomplices — they are fast, calculating, but not infallible. It's a race to the end.

Heat is directed and written by Michael Mann, who produced the television show "Miami Vice."

Mann manages to portray his plot meaningfully, with the help of the two lead characters who show the emotions and desires that drive them, and the consequences that follow.

Pacino and De Niro skillfully play their parts, making this movie filled with gun battles and assaults a smashing success. For those people who enjoy violence and shooting it is a must see.

However, even for those that do not usually enjoy movies of a violent nature, the riveting plot and excellent actors made the film the exception to the rule.

Local's lens gives SLO a deeper look at underwater life

By Susannah Linwood
Daily Staff Writer

She equalizes the pressure in her ears as she swims to lower depths of the ocean. Then Dorothy Cutter's artistic eye looks around, searching to find the perfect subject for her next photo.

The rays of moonlight filter through the ocean's surface as she nears the huge Pufferfish swimming slowly through the current.

Cutter carries her underwater camera and lens as she moves in closer to the half-asleep Pufferfish. After closing in on the desired distance, she focuses the lens of her camera on the fish's eyeball and the surrounding area of its face.

"It was probably the biggest Pufferfish I've ever seen," Cutter said while describing the slow-moving creature she photographed in Truk Lagoon, which is centered in the group of islands that make up Micronesia — located north of the equator.

"We dived the wrecks from the second World War," she said. "The ships sunk on their way to supply Japan with arms. It was sort of eerie."

"There was lots of marine life though," Cutter continued.

"Some of the ships had masts and bathrooms. There were also wine bottles, shoes, telegraphs and phones. These objects form almost like an artificial reef."

Cutter dove between 90 and 100 feet to get to the deck of these sunken ships, but most of her underwater photography is shot at about 20 to 60 feet, where there is more material to see and more light, according to Cutter.

Cutter, who is of medium height and size, with shoulder-length dark hair and thick eye liner surrounding the perimeter of her eyes, has painted and created graphic art for more than 40 years. She became involved in underwater photography after she earned her scuba diving certification eight years ago in her residence of Morro Bay.

After learning how to scuba dive she took a one-day course in photography and progressively became very interested in the underwater world.

"I started scuba diving and I saw all the wonderful stuff, so I started taking pictures," Cutter said.

Cutter goes on dive trips with her husband three or four times a year to different locations around the world. She said they live on the dive boats for about two weeks with eight to 11 other divers.

"I like the South Pacific," Cutter said. "There are many more species of fish and invertebrates there. Every reef is different."

Cutter has produced an assortment of colorful pictures from her dives to the Sulu Sea, Thailand, Papua New Guinea, Red Sea, Turk Lagoon, Solomon Islands and Australia. All photos are displayed at the San Luis Obispo Public Library until Feb. 12.

One of Cutter's favorite pieces is her photograph of the inside of an anemone, which is a sea creature she shot in Papua New Guinea.

"At night, the insides of the stomach come out," Cutter explained.

Cutter won the Best of Show in 1994 at the San Luis Art Center. Her work has also been displayed at the Natural History Museum in Morro Bay and various other private art galleries.

Cutter said she will continue with her underwater photography, and plans to become more involved with computer manipulation of photographs.

Three local artists to exhibit different techniques to U.U.

By Jeff Deach
Daily Staff Writer

Three women with three distinct styles came together for one common purpose: to show their art work to the community of San Luis Obispo.

An exhibit titled Three Women: Three Worlds, is being held in the University Union Gallerie as a prelude to Women's Week at Cal Poly. The exhibition celebrates the creativity of women by featuring local artist Ada Charvalia, of San Luis Obispo; Betty Field-Haley, of Los Osos and Gail Lapins, of Cambria.

According to Jeanne LaBarbera, galerie curator, each of the women featured in the exhibit are powerful in their own way.

"Charvalia has her own style of expressing her world views through figures," LaBarbera said. "Lapins, on the other hand, shows her inner feelings with the way she paints disturbing scenes."

"Then you have Field-Haley who loves to paint landscapes with watercolors in the outdoors," LaBarbera said.

Lapins is a well-known artist who appeared in a number of exhibitions, including the Los Angeles County Museum of Art. She studied at Otis Parsons from 1982-1986 and then at UCLA from 1986-1988.

Lapins paints with honesty, integrity, truth and feelings.

"I have to make sure that I have found something at a higher level," Lapins said.

When finished with a painting, she makes sure that it has everything she strives for.

Lapins said that her paintings deal with the evils of life. She admits she is a realist, and the paintings are a way for her to talk about issues in life.

"(Her paintings) are disturbing in that they make you think about questions," Lapins said.

According to Lapins, she is a physical painter who is drained when finished because she brings emotions into her work.

Charvalia, a member of Degas Pastel Society, has shown her art in both Athens, Greece and the United States. She studied figurative drawing at Cal Poly and Cuesta College.

Artist Betty Fields-Haley is one of the women artist on display at an exhibit titled Three Women: Three Worlds, which is being held in the University Union Gallerie to help kick off Women's Week at Cal Poly / Daily photo by Dawn Kalmar Charvaliz uses pastels to paint models and symbols which express her views.

"I paint the models and then at a later date I add the symbols around the models," she said. "Then I let the viewers get what they want to out of (the painting)."

Field-Haley teaches ink and watercolor painting for the extended education program at Cal Poly. Her work has been featured in the National Geographic Survey Gallery, the National Wildlife Federation Gallery and other galleries across the country.

Her landscapes, painted with watercolors, are not actual scenes but come from her imagination. She admits her style was influenced by Chinese paintings.

"I enjoy painting landscapes in the outdoors because I feel more alive," Field-Haley said. "The landscapes and the forms I paint give me more reaction in the outdoors when in creation."

Field-Haley said she paints in Los Osos, Big Sur, Sweet Springs or anywhere there is water.

"My paintings express my love of earth and land, which are important to me," she said.

Three Women: Three Worlds will be available for viewing in the U.U. Gallerie until Feb. 10.

Women's Week at Cal Poly will begin Feb. 9, and continue through Feb. 23.

All-woman CD sings praises of women's lives

By Justine Frederiksen
Daily Copy Editor

"Ain't Nuthin' but a She Thing" is exactly what its name suggests — it is a CD by, for and about women.

Produced by women, it is a collection of songs performed by female artists.

The CD is the first project of the Shirley Divers Foundation, founded in 1994 by producer Leigh Blake Sebastian.

Karen Song, of Good Karma Inc., worked with Sebastian on the project as an assistant producer, and explained the philosophy behind the CD and the Shirley Divers Foundation.

"Leigh started the foundation for her friend, Shirley, who died of breast cancer," Song said.

Sebastian developed the foundation not just as a namesake, but to make a difference in women's lives. The foundation distributes money among several charitable organizations directly involved with women's issues, including The Global Fund for Women, and the Ms. Foundation, according to a press release from the Shirley Divers Foundation.

Song said she was pleased to be recruited for the endeavor, and enjoyed both the project and working with Sebastian.

"She, to me, is an amazing visionary," Song said. "She's very energetic — she's a very unique person."

The finished result was also a source of pride, she said.

"We're very proud of what the outcome was," Song said. "It took a little over two years, and it went through a lot of changes."

Full of established and talented artists, the CD could stand on its musical merits alone. With a mixture of ballads and more boisterous songs, the CD includes the work of Melissa Etheridge, Sinead O'Connor, Annie Lennox, Queen Latifah and Salt-N-Pepa.

Most of the songs are also written by women, and all celebrate the lives, feelings and experiences of women.

The highlights are two haunting ballads by Melissa Etheridge and Sinead O'Connor.

Etheridge performs a song called "The Weakness in Me," which explores the feelings of a woman torn between an old lover and a new lover. Etheridge makes you believe she lived the situation herself, with all the emotion she gives to the song.

O'Connor performs an a cappella version of a traditional Irish folk song, "Women of Ireland," and her distinctive voice alone is enough to carry any song.

Song said all the artists were approached by Sebastian and herself, and the finished product they created was truly unique and well worth the effort.

THRILL: Band's name changed with its attitude

Yet this was not the first time Matt Brown, Jeff Jensen, Bill Decker and Pete McDade played and toured together. The four band members used to make up the band Uncle Green, but they pulled the plug and changed their name a little over a year ago to move on to new musical challenges.

"Making the switch from Uncle Green to 3 lb. Thrill was more than just a name change," Brown said. "It was like we started all over again."

"The name change happened within a week, but it was a long time coming," he added. "We'd been in Uncle Green since we were 15, and after a while you start to subconsciously avoid doing things that will conflict with what people expect from you."

The band mates formed Uncle Green as junior high students in their hometown of Basking Ridge, N.J. In 1984, the four members relocated to the Atlanta area, where they still reside, and quickly became a popular group in the local rock scene. By 1992 Uncle Green had a devoted regional following, four independent song releases and an album titled "Book of Bad Thoughts."

But the group's plunge into the mainstream music industry left them disillusioned. They decided to tear down their preconceptions and rebuild the band from the ground up, with a new attitude and a new musical philosophy.

"It was completely liberating," Brown said. "We've changed directions and we've cut back a lot. Uncle Green was caught up in crafting songs. We wrote hundreds of songs."

Principal songwriter Brown said most of the song crafting survived the change, but now he's writing fewer songs about more important things.

3 lb. Thrill — the name refers to the weight of the human brain — confronts topics on the darker side of human experience.

Brown says the name of their band is fitting because most of the songs are psychological stories. As spokesperson for the troupe, he describes 3 lb. Thrill and their music as brain food.

The album's subject matter includes the plight of a young rape victim ("Diana"), victims of government policy ("Bikini Island") and dysfunctional male-female relationships ("Mary Tells Me").

"At some point after this album was done," claims Brown, "it struck us that all of these songs seemed to be about people that had sort of been trodden upon or manipulated or abused by stronger forces. Pretty much every song on the album is, in one way or another, about somebody who's been victimized."

Probably the most vulnerable and controversial victim on the album is the girl named Diana in the song of the same title. The tune is about incest and the lyrics are haunting. ("Here's a kiss, Diana/Have you seen it on TV?/It's just a ticklish feeling in the place between your knees/Now I've done everything for you/Would you do something for me?")

"Diana" was written from the abuser's point of view," Brown explained. "I could have written it from the obvious point of view of the abused child, like 'My name is Luca,' but I chose to do it different. It's more challenging in the long run."

The single has already been released on the east coast in Atlanta, where it is receiving significant air play. "It's great," Brown boasts, "but I'm bored. It's all I hear."

According to Brown, the song is getting a mixed response. "It's good," he admits, "but it's also making people upset. People don't want to hear about (incest)."

The song "Diana" isn't about just one person that Matt Brown is acquainted with, it is a collection of different stories.

"A few of my female friends came to me with stories, all within a week period, about something that had happened to them," disclosed Brown. "I found it really alarming, and it upset me."

Another song on the album, "Something Will Come," was not as explicit.

Brown confessed, "We almost thought about not putting that song on the album because it sounds a lot like 'Diana.'"

Although the lyrics accompany the album, prior to an interpretation, the theme was unclear. ("When you travel back in time/Do you frame it in your mind?/And when you pin her elbows down/Does she float? or does she drown?")

"I thought the lyrics were really clear, but a lot of people ask me what the song is about," Brown said. "It's about rape."

"I know it sounds like I'm obsessed with sexual abuse, but at the time it felt like 50 percent, or more, of my friends had to fight their way to get out of some situation."

Brown says the most important thing to him professionally is to express individuality. To be able to directly express where he stands is something he's never done before.

3 lb. Thrill is now in a position to explore avenues they felt were not formerly available.

GOP cancels White House budget session with Clinton

By Alan From
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican congressional leaders abruptly canceled a budget-bargaining session with President Clinton Wednesday, saying there was no reason to meet until the administration presents a serious new offer.

The decision followed a 40-minute telephone conversation among Clinton, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, House Speaker Newt Gingrich and House Majority Leader Richard Armey.

Afterward, the GOP leaders issued a statement calling the talk "frank and useful," and saying they would meet the president "once he proposes a firm budget offer that moves in the direction" of the plan Republicans offered last week. No new meeting was scheduled.

But Wednesday's session was also called off at a time that several GOP congressional strategists, speaking on condition of anonymity, describe as one of confusion for the party.

They say many Republicans want to end the talks immediately because they believe Clinton is merely using them to portray himself as serious about balancing the budget. But halting the sessions, they fear, would let the president blame them for walking away from the negotiations, which could alienate voters and roil financial markets.

Illustrating their internal indecision, Gingrich, R-Ga., wanted GOP leaders to attend Wednesday's White House session while Dole, R-Kan., wanted to forgo it, said Republican participants.

And in a show of pique, Dole also complained that after Clinton promised no photographs would be taken at their last negotiating session, the White House gave Time magazine a photograph of "Clinton up there lecturing the rest of us."

"We told them we're not going to go to the White House unless there's a solid proposal, unless we can be assured we're all going to play by the same rules," Dole said on CNN. "We sit there as props in a Time magazine piece and that wasn't the understanding."

Though the two sides have not met since Jan. 9, neither would characterize Wednesday's cancellation as evidence that the long-running talks were dead. Republicans said they have received recent indications that the administration might make new suggestions for balancing the budget by 2002, the goal of the talks. "The president did indicating some flexibility," Dole said.

As they did when the talks were suspended last week, White House officials insisted that a bipartisan compromise remained possible. But they couldn't resist blaming the GOP for slowing progress.

"It's a recess," said White House spokesman Mike McCurry. "The bell has rung, and the Democrats are back in class. We don't know where the Republicans are."

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., and House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., traveled to the White House and had even sharper words for Republicans.

"I guess you'd call a situation where the Republicans have told us they're not prepared to come to the table an impasse," Daschle told reporters. "I don't know what else to call it."

The two sides are separated chiefly by differences over Medicare, Medicaid and other domestic programs and by a dispute over cutting taxes. Their quarrel is not only over numbers but over policy. Republicans, for example, want the states to decide who will be covered by Medicaid, while Clinton insists the federal government must continue to guarantee the program's health-care coverage for the poor.

Republicans have begun to emphasize their differences over policy with Clinton, hoping that will make their tough negotiating stance easier for the public to understand.

"He gave us a lesson in arithmetic," Dole told reporters, referring to their latest conversation with Clinton. "This is all about policy."

POLY BRIEFS

Cotright and Hoffman voted AWC players of the week

The American West Conference honored Cal Poly athletics this week, naming guards Shanta Cotright and Kellie Hoffman players of the week in basketball.

Last week Cotright scored 60 points, grabbed 15 rebounds and had 12 assists in just two games.

Against George Mason last weekend, Cotright tied a school record scoring 43 points. He also had nine rebounds, nine assists, and made six of 10 three-pointers.

At the beginning of the week, Cotright was averaging 17 points per game and was third in the AWC in field goal percentage at 52.2 percent.

Hoffman scored a team-high 14 points against Arizona last week and had six rebounds.

Currently Hoffman leads Cal Poly in scoring, averaging 11 points a game, and also leads the AWC in three-pointers made with 32.

Hoffman and the rest of the women's basketball team will open AWC play this Friday against Cal State Northridge at 7 p.m. in Mott Gym while Cotright and the men's basketball team open AWC play against Cal State Sacramento this Saturday.

REGENTS: UCs want Affirmative Action restored

preferences, said he hopes Wilson stays for more than the affirmative action debate to talk about funding higher education.

Before the committee takes up the affirmative action proposals, regents will hear from faculty members upset about the July vote.

The academic senates of all nine UC campuses have voted to ask the regents to reverse the decision.

Students, who have protested vociferously at almost every meeting since the July vote, planned a demonstration starting with a caravan from UC-Berkeley to the San Francisco campus where regents meet.

The protest was intended to "kick off an intensified campaign to pressure the UC Regents to restore affirmative action in the UCs," said a flyer announcing the demonstration.

Students at UC-Santa Cruz got a head start on the protests, shutting campus entrances Wednesday.

About 150 students gathered at each of two entrances to the campus.

The elimination of race and gender in hiring and contracting at UC took effect Jan. 1. The change in admissions takes effect next January.

The July votes, seen at the time as the first major victory for anti-affirmative action forces, were bitterly divided — 15-10 on hiring and contracting and 14-10 on admissions.

Affirmative action is not the only item of controversy on Thursday's agenda.

No vote is scheduled, but regents were to discuss the use of People's Park, an issue that generally provokes lively debate.

The 2.3-acre plot of land near Berkeley's Telegraph Avenue originally belonged to UC-Berkeley but was taken over by activists in the 1960s.

Critics complain that the area has become a hangout for the homeless and drug addicts.

For the past five years, UC-Berkeley and the city of Berkeley have shared responsibility for managing and developing the park under a lease that expires in March.

Regents on Thursday will hear about a new plan approved by the Berkeley City Council. The plan would preserve the park as an open space and create a joint oversight committee of city, university and community representatives to administer changes to the park. Those changes include cleaning it up and making it safer.

Meanwhile, a citizen group is trying to raise money to buy the park from the university.

PROTESTS: 'Classes and activities inside campus remained undisturbed'

in at the west gate and started the arrests.

Irwin said 14 were booked on misdemeanor charges involving obstruction of an entryway, while one protester also was accused of resisting arrest.

"It's apparent that there were instigators coming from outside — not UCSC students — who were responsible for encouraging the incident to continue as it did," Irwin said.

Classes and other activity inside the campus remained undisturbed, Irwin said, and both entrances were reopened by 2:30 p.m.

Graduate student Michael Shellenberger, one of the protesters, said the group was peaceful, and he was surprised at the arrests.

"The students are all non-violent. They have their arms linked, and they're standing up. The police pry their arms apart and carry them away," Shellenberger, 24, said.

California is 'prime' for assisted suicide?

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Jack Kevorkian has amassed funds for assisted-suicide clinics and regards California as prime territory for an "obitrium."

Kevorkian, who has been present at 26 deaths, most recently the death of a San Marcos woman, "is coming out to California to prove how utterly impotent (the state is) in stopping his work," said his lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger.

For several years Kevorkian has proposed creating a network of obitria where terminal patients would receive pain treatment and, for those who wanted it, help from "obitriatrists" in ending their lives.

Last year Kevorkian opened a clinic in Michigan, then closed it after he lost his lease when someone died there. The landlord said he wasn't aware of the intended use when he rented the property out.

In November, retired Los Angeles filmmaker Kurt Simon delivered Kevorkian a $20,000 check to honor his "pursuit of individual freedom."

"Dr. Kevorkian was very excited by the award," Simon said. "He said that with this money, he finally had enough to open his clinic."

Fieger's and Simon's comments were reported Wednesday by the Los Angeles Times.

A Chicago woman who admired Kevorkian left him $50,000 in her will, Fieger told the paper. The lawyer said the total amount in the Margo Janus Mercy Clinic Fund, named for Kevorkian's late sister, is "nobody's business."

"Technically, there is nothing he'd have to do to open such a clinic," Fieger said. "He wouldn't need any kind of license because he has always said you don't have to have an M.D. to help people end their suffering."

California Deputy Attorney General Thomas Lazar said Kevorkian, labeled a "reckless instrument of death" by the American Medical Association, would be arrested if he carried out his plan here.

"You can't open a business in this state or any state in order to do something that is illegal," Lazar said. "And what Mr. — and please stress that he is now only Mr. — Kevorkian has done is very much against the law."

Kevorkian, 67, lost his medical license in California and his license in Michigan, where he lives, is suspended pending the outcome of various legal actions including two upcoming trials on assisted suicide charges.

Fieger said it was unlikely Kevorkian would open a clinic until after the cases are resolved.

Earlier this month Kevorkian gave up his appeals to keep his California license, but he has not abandoned a federal lawsuit challenging the state medical board's action as a violation of his constitutional rights.

The latest case in which Kevorkian acknowledged involvement was Nov. 8, when Patricia Cashman of San Marcos died in Kevorkian's presence in Michigan.

Cashman's death also marked the resurfacing of Kevorkian's homemade suicide machine, a device that delivers large quantities of barbiturates and other potentially lethal drugs.

The "mercitron" was found attached to Cashman's body when she was found in a car. The machine hadn't been used since 1991, when Kevorkian's license to practice medicine in Michigan was suspended, and he lost access to drugs.

Cashman brought her own medicine. "She had been saving up," Fieger said.
